NATURE OF WORK

A physical therapist assistant (PTA) is a health care professional involved in direct patient care under the supervision of a Physical Therapist (PT). A PTA applies therapeutic modalities to alleviate pain including hot and cold packs, paraffin baths, ultrasound, electrical stimulation and traction. A PTA restores function through therapeutic massage, athletic taping and gait training. A PTA educates patients about appropriate therapeutic exercises to optimize their functional outcome. PTA's cannot perform the initial evaluation of the patient, change the plan of care or discharge the patient. These are the duties of a PT.

WORKING CONDITIONS

The PTA may work full or part-time with varied hours and days. PTA's are found in nursing homes, outpatient clinics, schools, early intervention, sports therapy, inpatient rehabilitation, hospitals and other types of facilities. Some assistants working in outpatient offices or clinics may work evening or weekend hours, to coincide with patients' personal schedules. In order to lift patients and assist them with their treatment PTAs need a moderate degree of strength. Constant kneeling, stooping, and standing for long periods are also part of the job.

TRAINING & QUALIFICATIONS

Physical Therapist Assistants typically earn an associate degree from a Physical Therapist Assistant Program accredited by the Commission on Accreditation in Physical Therapy Education (CAPTE). Students who successfully complete this type of program are eligible to take the National Physical Therapist Assistant Licensure Examination in order to practice in most states.

JOB OUTLOOK

Employment of Physical Therapist Assistants is expected to grow much faster than average through the year 2018. Over the long run, demand for Physical Therapist Assistants will continue to rise, in accordance with growth in the number of individuals with disabilities or limited function.
