Red On White

The cardinals convened
 In the forsythia this afternoon.
 It was an ecumenical council;
 Sparrows and chickadees were there.
 Later, the gathering moved
 To the bare branches of the redbud tree.
 The cardinals' crimson feathers
 Were all fluffed and puffed
 Up against the cold.
 They looked like Valentine's Day decorations
 Against the backdrop of pure white
 New fallen snow,
 Endlessly fluttering down to the feeder
 And flying up again to the tree.
 They are nature's valentine to me.
 Rising and falling;
 Red on white;
 Like red roses and white babies' breath;
 Like red hearts and white lace.

Director's Corner

People demand freedom of speech to make up for the freedom of thought which they avoid.

Soren Aabye Kierkegaard (1813-1855)

It is too often that we forget to think before we speak. Advice is offered, promises are made and agreements are struck; but with what degree of intellectual and ethical fortitude. This is a time when words, along with adept abilities in their utilization, can define a person. Recklessness and ignorance do not allow for being exempt from accountability. At some time and in some way each person reaps the rewards or consequences for the words put forth. Please be thoughtful.

Interested In a Career In Fine Arts? Want To Work In Theatre?

"Vision," writes Jonathan Swift, "is the art of seeing things invisible." In art, vision creates life and meaning. For example, a sculptor faces a block of granite and "sees" in it a shape that must be set free; a poet perceives an intense human experience and fashions a poem to express a vision of life's meaning; and an actor's vision turns a dramatic character into a life-like, dimensional human.

The theatre is the direct descendant of fertility rites, war dances and all the corporate ritual expressions by means of which our ancestors, often wiser than we, sought to relate themselves to God, or the gods, the great abstract forces which cannot be apprehended by reason, but in whose existence reason compels us to have faith.
